

Current issue

Volume 24, Issue 4

October 2015

CONTENTS

KEYNOTE

Teaching business English, Robert McLarty introduces our theme with some thoughts on some key areas.

From teacher to trainer: Being an inbetweener Eve Conway describes her first steps into teacher-training.

PRACTICAL IDEAS

Fact, opinion or saying. The perfect minimalist lesson, Robert McLarty describes a low preparation, high yield lesson.

Writing rulers. A tool to support revising and editing, Benjamin Moorhouse reports on a useful tool for helping young learners to revise and edit their written work.

Podcasts as projects, Tim Thompson teaches his classes a useful social media skill.

Podcasts: Time for teachers to join the renaissance, Shaun Wilden looks at the growing interest in listening to and making podcasts for professional development.

Marking: A grind or ground for experimentation? Simon Mumford suggests ways of making marking more rewarding for both you and your classes.

Grappling with the present perfect, Daniel Xerri looks at why learners struggle with this particular tense and offers some solutions.

Teaching turn-taking: Jonathon Ryan and Leslie Forrest look at this neglected aspect of communication and suggest some practical activities for the classroom.

REVIEWS

A Book I've Used

Star: Sander Thomson.

<https://www.modernenglishteacher.com/current-issue/> accessed 1/10/15