Abstract
Social media has become a popular marketing way for all sizes business to close to their prospects and customers. Event marketing is important to get event information from the target market and create awareness. Great social media marketing can bring dramatic success to event organisation. Hamilton Chinese Students Association (HCSA) is a young organisation, which provides events for Chinese students. As an event organizer, HCSA has already kept a series of right communication tools for its members and target audience. However, the social media marketing plan is still waiting to improve. Thus, the aim of this research is using HCSA’s event as a case study to analyse the use of social media in event marketing and provide recommendations. A combination of quantitative research and qualitative research has been used in this research. Event marketing theories and social media marketing tips have been analysed with HCSA's practices. The staff and target customer of HCSA have participated in the data collection process. With data analysis, several recommendations are given to help HCSA build up an effective event social media marketing plan.

Abstract
Housing affordability is a major problem in New Zealand and it has escalated following unprecedented increases in residential property values over the last five years. The issue is extremely complex with a wide assortment of variables that have an influence. This paper has focused on New Zealand’s property taxation policies The tax structure in New Zealand is inappropriate as it relies heavily on taxing the productive sectors of the economy. A major hole in the tax base exists concerning the taxation of capital, particularly around property where subjective legislation and susceptible exemptions almost encourage speculation. This paper has reviewed the impact of foreign investment, a land transfer duty instrument and the bright line test on housing affordability. It is recommended that data collected on foreign investment is revised to deem non-permanent New Zealand residents as foreign buyers. It is also recommended that foreign buyers are restricted from buying existing residential property stock. The low-rate and broad based land transfer duty scheme described in this report should be implemented to correct distortionary investment choices while simultaneously generating significant revenue. The revenue should be used to significantly reduce income taxes, creating a tax switch. The main home exemption should be removed from the bright line test to create more equitable outcomes and improve the tests effectiveness.

It is hoped this reform package would steer people away from the pursuit of tax-free capital gains from residential property and encourage investment in productive sectors of the economy that actually stimulate economic growth.

Abstract
This is a research report for Wintec Venues to assist with its business. Wintec Venues is a corporative business under Waikato Institution of Technology. The organisation provides different venues to both Wintec and external clients for different purposes. The report is going to talk about investigation on possible marketing strategies to improve event management services of Wintec Venues, as well as the advertising methods to attract potential external clients. Research methods include both quantitative and qualitative research. As a result, online survey and an interview will be carried out to achieve research objectives. The results collected from both questionnaire and interview show a strong link to the main four marketing strategies provided under literature review, especially on use of social media and digital marketing. The results also bring up many opportunities to Wintec Venues to improve their business and overcome existing difficulties. In conclusion, use of technology is obviously a trend for the promotion of the company, as it not only makes communication more convenient but also provide an efficient channel on spreading the words. Especially the use of social media, such as Facebook, Snapchat, Instagram, Twitter, etc., is one of the leading sources of clients, and will benefit business and organisation in many ways as to build up network as well as connection on the internet. Digital marketing also allow business to break through traditional methods to reach different types of clients.

Abstract
New Zealand is an exporting country that has long been negotiating bilateral and multilateral trade agreements for the overseas market. The most recent Free Trade Agreement (FTA) was signed with South Korea and taken effect since December 2015. Though not soon, it is hoped that the market share for New Zealand products will gradually grow especially in dairy products due to tariff reduction. Marketing research should be in progress to promote more trade between the two countries. The present study provides a look into potential market in South Korea by investigating the brand awareness for New Zealand dairy product. A theoretical framework was given on brand awareness, brand equity and pricing, and country-of-origin on brand equity, while a survey was conducted in South Korea with quantitative research method. There were 166 respondents and the results suggest that Koreans do have New Zealand product awareness but not particularly for a brand product. The overall country image of New Zealand is quite positive with a favourable perception of New Zealand products and for long-term sustainability for good brand equity, exporting New Zealand brand dairy products should be continuously regulated by the government’s quality mark.

Abstract
For the small business such as coffee shop, identify successful marketing strategies to improve their customer satisfaction when developing effectiveness promotion activities, developing competitive pricing strategies, improving customer service quality and product quality control can be crucial for the start-up business. As this research aims that seeking appropriate marketing strategies for Impresso Café Eatery Catering to developing customer loyalty programs. In order to collect accurate data from the research, it was looking at literature studies of customer loyalty programs from other businesses. Also, using questionnaire research as a primary information to collect customer personal feeling with the products quality, service quality, promotion activities and price provided by Impresso Café Eatery Catering. As questionnaire research, it has completed by random 50 customers in Impresso café. From the result of the questionnaire, there are over 80 percent have high expectation on the service and product quality and they also claimed that appearance and attitude of staff when they require assistance are significant elements that can influence their purchase decisions. And the research result shows that the younger customers tend to proper price and not quite care about the service quality.
This research clarifies the relationship between customer loyalty and successful marketing strategies. Also, all of the findings from this research will be used for help Impresso Café Eatery Catering planning and control their future marketing strategies performance. When Impresso café improving their customer service quality and developing promotion activities, the questionnaire results from customers need to be considered for enhancing their competitive advantage in the market. Furthermore, this research provides recommendations for Impresso café further development.

Abstract
The study addresses research gaps on methodologies for implementing software systems into Small to Medium-sized Businesses (“SMEs”). Clarification of how the implementation of Xero™ accounting software and WorkFlowMax™ information management software (“WFM™”) was provided to an SME, as well as the impacts of changing software systems on an SME. An evaluative case study was carried out on a small business in New Zealand, over a period of six months where this software had recently been implemented. Interviews with three SME staff members and a senior member of the software vendor, plus participant observation showed that there was scope for significant improvements to be made on both sides. For the vendors, recommendations from this case study include better management of SME expectations of software capability; increasing time spent with the client; and providing greater clarity around the scope and limitations of training provided. For the SME, recommendations from this case study include: identifying an internal champion with effective communication skills and/or spreading championship roles between more than one staff member; providing greater transparency during planning stages of software adoption combined with opportunities for staff to discuss their user needs; and greatly increasing the frequency of minuted meetings with all company administrators.

Abstract
Due to the fierce competition in clothing industry in New Zealand. This study analysed major determinants that influence consumer behaviors especially in Hamilton. The background of this research was stated at the beginning of the report. Also, there is 14 factor that may impact purchase intentions listed in the article, including store image, employee politeness, clients' gender, products quality, word of mouth as well as other nine determinants. The researcher conducted a primary research and gained all data through a questionnaire. There were 150 informants participated in this research.

After the analysis, the respondents' feature will be demonstrated in descriptive statistics, and the answers to the research question will be described in the results section. The first finding of this research is that employee politeness and consumer’s gender can impact the budget people would like to spend in an apparel store. Another finding of this research is that store image, word of mouth, as well as product quality, are the major determinant of the frequency that clients will visit a garment store.

As a result, the researcher provides some recommendations for all clothing retailers to improve sales performance; firstly, coach staff before they provide service to your clients. Secondly, offer some chairs and entertainment for consumer's partner. Thirdly, increase the investment for store's decoration and design a stunning shopping bag for customers to carry. Fourthly, offer clients coupon or discounts when they bring their friends to purchase products together. Finally, retailers should focus on the industry's movement and adjust rapidly.

Abstract

Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) maintains the balance between internal and external factors of the organisations. The study aims to explore the relationship between the CSR disclosure and the Financial Performance (FP) of industrial organisations operating in New Zealand. Six industrial companies of New Zealand were selected randomly, and secondary data of their annual reports as well as CSR reports and online reports were prepared for a regression analysis. Average Share Price and CSR activities disclosed are the variables of the regression analysis. Findings revealed that there is a positive relationship between CSR disclosure and the FP of the industrial companies operating in New Zealand.

Abstract

In current times it has been seen an increased uptake of client organisations moving to the Xero accounting system platform. With increased uptake, there has been increased exposure to risk and issues upon implementing the new system. Literature supports the idea that shifting accounting systems can be a relatively risk involved process and various considerations should take place. This report seeks to summarise the current environment leading consumers to use Xero as an accounting system, identify the major issues faced upon converting to Xero platform and the risks of conversion, and identify the key considerations which may aid in reducing the level of risk involved in a Xero conversion. To do this six semi-structured interviews were conducted with employees of a Hamilton office with a thematic analysis conducted on the results to draw conclusions. It was found that the time element, data and change management were the main factors surrounding issues upon converting to the Xero accounting system platform. Recommendations determined from the analysis are that the organisation could implement a more stringent and structured change management programme surrounding new conversions, including the introduction and adaptation of process diagrams as change management tools. Investment in training client employees as change drivers would also prove beneficial. The organisation Hamilton could also implement a structured communication plan for clients during and post conversion, and invest in continuous training for both staff and clients of the firm. The study undertaken was limited by the organisational context, being focussed on a sample taken from six employees only, therefore, generalisations may not be able to be made from this research of the holistic conversion environment. Further research may involve the surveying of external parties such as clients to increase the reliability and validity of the results.

Abstract
Historically, middle-class white males were the only people to occupy the accounting field. Due to globalisation, the need for workplace diversity has increased especially in the accounting industry. Therefore, the numbers of ethnic minorities and women entering the accounting industry have increased. The purpose of this research report is to find out what the effects of ethnic and gender diversity are in accounting firms in New Zealand. The secondary research method was used to produce the report. The collection of data involved using the research engines and browsing through statistics websites. The findings are ethnic minorities experience difficulty in entering the accounting profession, encounter communication challenges within the accounting firms, and struggle to reach top management positions due to language and cultural barriers. While women were found to experience gender inequality in the accounting firms, employment discrimination, and encounter barriers to career progression. This may have an impact on the turnover of the accounting firms. Recommendations include developing a diversity plan, enforcing an anti-discrimination policy, implementing education and training programmes for skills development, improving performance reviews and feedback along with encouraging informal mentor relationships, and equal pay among the accountants.

Abstract
The research is conducted to know the effects of cultural diversity in the workplace. What sort of strategies could be implemented to overcome these problems? Secondary research is being used to collect and analyse the information and data like published books, journals, articles, internet sources like google scholar, newspaper, and one search. And the key findings of the research were organisation can have positive benefits from cultural diversity if it is managed effectively whereas an organisation can have negative outcomes if it is poorly managed. Organisation needs to take certain strategies to manage cultural diversity in the workplace. Distinctive multinational organisations are taking benefits of cultural diversity while a few associations are confronting challenges. An association ought to have a powerful system to oversee cultural diversity in a working environment in a proficient way. Many variables influence culture, and they influence how individual raised and give them an alternate point of view and an alternate approach to communicate. In spite of the fact that there are barriers of obstructions in having a different workforce in an association, there are a lot of advantages as well.

Therefore, my key recommendations in this report are organisation should conduct motivational, leadership and behavioural workshops as part of diversity training and development and involve all employees. Managers need to adapt up to various methodologies keeping in mind the end goal to run business easily. Dealing with a diverse team is a critical capacity to get comes about; managers can have limited learning of influencing productive and different to the group. Organisation should continue creating, execute and keep up preparing for a drawn-out stretch of time to manage cultural diversity in the workplace. Further recommendations are included on recommendation section.

The research question of this study is “What is the best strategy for Momento-Uni, especially in holiday”. Momento-Uni is a café and restaurant which is located in the Waikato University in Hamilton. In this study, it is aim to develop and identify a proper strategy for Momento-Uni to create competitive advantages and increase its sales in normal period of time, furthermore, a specific strategy also needs to be developed when there is a holiday period to balance its loss and profits. On the other hand, because of the special location of the Momento-Uni, the strategy needs to be created for its sustainable and long-term development and its unique marketing position.

In this study, a mixed research method is used which includes quantitative and qualitative study design and observation. A questionnaire is developed to collect the information and data about the customers’ evaluation and recommendation for Momento-Uni’s service and products. An interview was held with their manager to understand Momento-Uni’s business goals, current situation, internal working environment and future development. The observation was developed by the researcher to evaluate their competitor and internal working issues.
As a result, it shows that the main customers are students from 18-30 years old and coffee and drinks and snacks take up most profit of the whole sales. Through the result, a focus strategy is developed because students are the mainly targeted segments and to meet their needs. However, Momento-Uni does not have a clear differentiation and cost-leadership strategy to meet customers’ variable needs. As students do not have a high consumption level, in the future, the challenges will be existed. The results also shows that in holidays, the number of customers are declined steeply which increase the difficulties in the future growth.

According to the results, it recommends that Momento-Uni needs to develop a clear strategy with differentiation and cost-leadership strategy to offer customer differentiated service and products, creates its products varieties and improve its service quality. For the customer psychology and behavior, by better understanding the potential thought, feeling and intentions of the customers, a proper strategy needs to be developed about validation of existing insights and the creation of new and novel insight to follow the marketing trend to increase its marketing competitiveness. For the human resource management, Momento-Uni needs to have a reasonable staff management during the normal time, especially in holidays, the opening hour for each site in holiday will be adjusted, Lake site and M2 site will be closed in a few weeks. Lake site always have overmuch staff, the staff in lake site will be reduced in normal time. For the future growth, the new working policy and business plan will be developed and improved to achieve its business goals for the future success.

Abstract

This research report is about a study conducted in Sustain Energy Solutions to form a strategic alliance with JSR. The JSR is another company based in Hamilton, doing business in refrigeration, heating, and ventilation. The qualitative research method is used in this study as it is based on the response and opinions of participants. The thematic analysis is used to evaluate the respondent's interview and record the results. We looked up various scopes for the literature review to identify strategies for competitive advantage. This research describes the benefits that SES can attain by forming an alliance with JSR. We found that formation of alliance could help them to give the customers a complete and effective home solution for heating and cooling. We also found that outsourcing of insulation is not a good option for Sustain Energy Solutions as the installation of insulation is the major source of revenue for SES. Hiring of inexperienced installers and giving them, adequate training is one of the strategies that could help SES to solve the issue of lack of installers for insulation. Maintaining the competitive advantage of Energy Conservation Awareness Programme (ECAP) through the door to door marketing would give the company a long-term advantage over its competitors.

Abstract

Corporate social responsibility is an increasingly important aspect, especially in New Zealand with the uphold of a clean and green image. Consumers are demanding more accountability of companies regarding sustainability which is displayed through many recent events in New Zealand such as a big branded supermarket, Countdown, banning single-use plastic bags by 2018 (Clayton, 2017). The question that stems from the increased corporate social reporting in New Zealand companies is whether this impacts on the profitability of these companies. This issue is targeted at the New Zealand banking industry, especially as banks hold the image of being “greedy” and money-orientated.

The method of the current study involved retrieving data from each of the competing bank’s financial statements and corporate social reports for the years 2012-2016. The data retrieved consisted of the Return on Total Average Assets (ROA) and Return on Ordinary Shareholder’s Equity (ROE) to measure the profitability figures. The profitability figures are measured against the CSR aspects of each bank including the women in leadership percentage, dollar figures of community investment and CO2e produced (tonnes).

The methods that dominate the current study orbit around Pearson’s correlation analysis which is valuable for answering the primary research question of whether there is a definite relationship between CSR reporting and profitability in New Zealand banks. Scatter plots were also of use in this stage of the method and displayed the banks’ CSR aspects over the years, as well as present trends. The results produced some interesting findings in which made it difficult to answer the research question in its entirety. Results differed between each bank, but two of the leading banks produced relatively strong positive relationships between the women in leadership percentage and CO2e reductions against the profitability measures.
Key recommendations that would stem from the most significant results is for New Zealand banks to focus more on the equality aspect in their employment as well as the environmental issues they are creating. Reducing their carbon footprint and ensuring a gender equal workplace is suggested to be tied to increased value and profitability from the current study. Incorporating a framework to be able to measure CSR within the banks is progressive towards adding value profit wise as well as environmentally, socially and sustainably.

Recommendations for future studies would be to research over a more extended period to obtain more reliable results. Another suggestion would be to use a different profitability measure as return on equity and return on assets differed from each other. Using one profitability measure, even a figure such as net income for the year may produce more accurate results as many other factors contribute to or interfere with the values of return on assets and return on equity.

Abstract
There has been a growing concern in the past few decades around the impact of industrial activities on the environment and the society. This situation led corporate management to develop environmental management systems and to incorporate social and environmental information in their annual reports. Not all organisations have the same level of disclosure and this difference is caused by many reasons such as; difference in activity, difference in stakeholders, influence from media etc. This paper aims to investigate the difference in social and environmental disclosure between profit and non-profit organisations. A sample of 7 profit and 7 non-profit organisations were selected for the purpose this study and content analysis was conducted using disclosure indexes. The results were analysed using graphs, tables and t-tests. The findings revealed that all though all the organisations disclosed social and environmental information, profit-organisations had a higher level of disclosure. It implied that larger and higher income companies disclosed higher level of CSR disclosure. It was found that there is a lot of room for improvement for organisations in both sectors to increase their disclosure. This will increase their transparency and help establish their commitment towards sustainability development (A. Manaf, Mohamed, & Atan, 2006).

Abstract
This report discussed about how to use online training and development program to improve retail industry's (The Warehouse) customer service. The purpose of this report is to find out an effective method of using online training and development to improve The Warehouse’s customer service. The report uses secondary research to find out the skills, knowledge and experience that are important for retail employees to improve their customer service, importance of training and development for customer service, importance and benefits of online training and development, methods of creating an effective online training and development program, and technical factors of online training. Based on the literature review, the report finds that sales associate knowledge, communication skills, knowledge about the organisation, cash handling and some transferable skills are the important knowledge that should be involved in the online training program. Customer service is the blood of business and it has huge impact on businesses' performance. By using online training, businesses can save cost and time, deliver to more staff in shorter time frame, allows employees to take the training in different locations, increase staff engagement and it would be easier to update material. To design an online training program, businesses need to take three main steps: identify training needs, design and delivery, and evaluate results. The report also discuss a lot of recommendations of designing a training program.

Abstract
This report helps to provide understanding of the implications tax poses on small businesses in New Zealand. This is analysed using current literature found on internet databases using secondary research. The conclusion of this report shows that tax is costly on small businesses and is a time-consuming process for small businesses who do not hire outside accounting help. This report helps to show how the current tax system is over complicated and leaves small businesses at a disadvantage. This study also helps to emphasise how tax evasion is a major problem in New Zealand costing the country billions, and how this links to small businesses and the over complicated nature of the tax system. Recommendations following this study are that the New Zealand tax system needs to be simplified to help small businesses successfully pay their taxes. Another recommendation following the literature is that small businesses should have to spend on average one hour and make one payment per month for their compliance.

This report presents an analysis of responses by the employees of “Vege-King” to find the best strategies to improve the customer base by taking care as how they feel working with the company. The hypothesis was taken as more satisfied employee with the company better customer service he will give. To know that various aspects were taken into consideration. As a part of my course I have done research to make this project and this project will mainly focus on finding the best strategy by taking care of the marketing mix to increase the customer base for “Vege-king” that will the company to gain customers, regain the former customers and retain current customers. This project will help to find who are the main competitors of this company and the “target group”. As, this project will highlight who are the main competitors of “Vege-King”, competitors are those who are providing the same products which are offered by “Vege-King” within 5 to 7 Kilometers that are targeting the same customer which this company is targeting. Quantitative and qualitative both method of research has practiced that included surveys and interviews. Research could have few of the problem like the actual feedback from employees, limited budget and time constant. Company may not like the employees to complete the survey or questioner in the working hours. This report will give the brief introduction about the company then will show the organizational content that will include internal (things that are in control of company) as well as external analysis (things that the company have no control on). There are few limitations that has been highlighted in the report so the data that has been collected and analysed is influenced by some aspects and these things are well mentioned in limitation part. Ethically there should not be any issues to any one with the report but still steps have been performed to make sure things are done in more ethical way. The project is not very costly to do that makes sure no financial burden is put on any of the participant. Literatures are read on different marketing mix to undertake he research properly. This report will also give a look on the competitors of Vege-King and the competitive advantages of this company over others. At the end this report will show the discussion and conclusion driven from the survey done and will also give highlight recommendation for the company to have even stronger customer base. All the collected information in survey are attached in the appendix at last.

Financial reporting standards for registered charities were introduced in the year 2015 in New Zealand. Certain charities were also required to have their financial statements audited and reviewed by independent auditors. These legislative changes brought about a paradigm shift in the accounting and reporting practices of charities. The intention behind these changes were to improve public trust in the functioning of charities. This report aims to examine the impact of these reporting legislations on charities in Waikato region. It also aims to analyse the need for improving public trust in charities and the perception of charities on the new auditing requirements. A literature review has been performed to understand the history of charities regulation in New Zealand, the need for new financial reporting standards and the tier system based on which the new reporting requirements have been implemented. A qualitative research was conducted among participating accountants in Hamilton. The results have been analysed and recommendations have provided with an aim to improve the legislative changes implementation process for charities sector, particularly for smaller charities.

Abstract
After alcohol was made it had a negative and positive effect on human nature but in last 10 years the varieties of alcohol have increased and thus the negative impact on humans have increased. Crabtree, A., Latham, N., Bird, L., & Buxton, J. (2016). But in the early 1970s campaigns such as ‘responsible drinking’ addresses about the hazardous drinking and its related consequences. It was used to promote as low-risk drinking, promote risky drinking or just muddy the waters. After all these factors the purpose of this research is to find out consumer buying behaviour when it comes to customer flow, branding and marketing, store layout, and location. The method based on the literature review, an observation was conducted in two shops which shows a clear picture of consumer buying pattern as they have been selling for more than 10 years. Key findings include how the location of the organization helps in increasing the sales, how customer flow is seen within 24 hours, how store layout is well organized for selling purpose, and how branding and marketing are done by major products such as Waikato draught, Stein lager, and Woodstock within the shop.

Abstract
The purpose of this research proposal is to study and analyse about how the business operations are executed and what is lacking in execution and administration. A precise research has been carried out to understand current situation, strength, weaknesses, opportunities, threats, customer requirements, competition, pricing and promotions. It is important to consider research as a main part to business growth.
There are significant details involved which could be missed whilst execution. Traditional strategies are used in the research in pricing and promotions where in most of the liquor stores the pricing strategies are used as per the franchise or the by admiration. In Blackbull the pricing strategies are followed as per the instructions of the suppliers. Their special rates are implemented during discount and sale timings. The problem that is to be solved is to discover best conventional method that is required to be practised in store for enhancing business techniques in the areas of promotions, negotiations and building customer relationships. In the process of implementation of methods, the results yielded gives information on how strategies need to be applied in daily business activities depending on various customer requirements.

The application of strategies like market mix, effective negotiation with suppliers, rapport building with customers and introduction of new products at store had proven to be an effective way for the growth of Blackbull. As the results are segregated most of the results indicate customers are very happy with the services Blackbull provides.

But few customers want some changes in store and some new products to be introduced which will be put into action by management in the coming days.

When doing my research some critical elements are looked after which had phenomenal potential that can help in the growth of liquor business where some of them are marketing mix and stock control which are directly proportional to each other because marketing strategies could only be applied when there is sufficient amount of stock. Internal business analysis and customer base are identified in respect to critical success factors which are substantially evaluated by key performance indicators during the process of growth of the liquor business. Mission and vision target to overcome competitive advantage by focusing on goals and objectives which are the key elements for the success of Blackbull. The results indicate that they are different levels in achieving the required success which is possible only through effective administration of marketing and promotional strategies that are applied uniquely according to the marketing mix.

I think implication of methods and results indicate win-win situation. If the business strategies are practised consistently depending on the supply and demand meter as there might be a substantial growth

Abstract
The ethnic beer shop is a retail shop that will sell prepacked ethnic beers that are popular all around and coming from different corners of the world. The collection available at the shop will be unmatched to other stores those sell beers. The main idea behind the formation of the store will be actually seen through the beer choice we provide for our customers. There will be a manager and two working staff for operating the store and who will always be there to help the customers as we aim to provide excellent customer service. The plans of the ethnic beer shop are to fight hard to keep the prices lower than the competitors and give customers better prices than them. The beer shop will be located at Kahikatea Drive, Frankton which is one of the busiest routes from Hamilton to Wellington. In forthcoming years there are plans to open a brewery attached with the beer store to start brewing fresh beer for our lovely customers.

Abstract
This paper reports key findings from the three charities organisations based in Waikato region. Historically there was a poor accounting. No legal requirements to produce financial statement before 2013. Financial Reporting Act (FRA) 2013 requires all registered charities to produce Generally Accepted Accounting Practices (GAAP). From 1 April 2015 new reporting standard requirements became operative. Now the government is pulling out of social work and getting charities to do more work because the government is saying if we are funding you money we seek accountability. And government do this because local charities are in the community and know how to do it in a better way. Standards are operationalised by External Reporting Board (XRB) through four new tier structure that has different requirements for different entities. There are several well-known problems experienced by these charities. Difficulty in completing the tasks on time. A review of relevant literature reveals that this is a problem. The research discovers that these three charities are supportive of new requirements. Analysis of the survey results showed that 52% charities didn’t spend any money in adopting new standards. We have two years of operationalising new financial standards. There are many people who have made comments on what will happen. So, It’s now interesting to find out and do research on these three charities organisations.
This research then aims out what has happened to these charities. The research will reveal are these three charities are satisfied with new reporting standards.

Abstract

The whole paper is based on the impact of the new financial reporting requirements on charities in New Zealand issued by the External Reporting Board (XRB). The new reporting requirements came into effect on 1st April 2015. The compliance with the new reporting standards which is called generally accepted accounting practice (GAAP) is mandatory for all the registered charities in New Zealand. According to new reporting standards, charities are required to prepare general purpose financial reports (GPFR), which is further followed by the Tier system.

The research is based on the semi-structured interview methods and two local (Waikato) charities have been interviewed. The research also focuses on the historical criticism and the current literature of charity accounting. Semi-structured interviews helped the researchers to go through the deep insights of the topic. Thematic analysis has been carried out for the findings and conclusions.

It has been concluded in this research that the new reporting standards have significantly increased the accountability of the charities. However, there are few of the charities who are non-compliance with the new reporting standards.

Abstract

Indian restaurants are very common in the Hamilton nowadays. People love to visit Indian restaurants for eating Indian cuisines. In Hamilton, there are total 50+ Indian restaurants. They serve two thousand people in a day. The Indian cuisines are also demandable in local people. I also want to open an Indian restaurant in hillcrest area of Hamilton which is the main shopping centre of three suburbs. For this purpose I will do proper market research which includes the interviews of people and their interest for Indian food. I also interview the managers of others restaurant. It will help me to know about their suppliers, market techniques etcetera which will help me during opening of Indian restaurant. The interviews will also help me to set the prices of food and helpful to provide a services which are not available in other restaurants. My restaurant will be sole trader and includes the staff of 5 members. I also provide services like home delivery and online application. I also need finance for my restaurant and I collect this finance by several options which are available in the market at that time.

Abstract

Initial phase of the research was initiated with the exterior data collection on the organisation which could be improved based on the customer feedback mechanism which is very important. The shop was going in for economic downfall after a successful stint in their first financial quarter which demanded for a detailed analysis of their organisation by an external force. The organisation was happy to accept the research idea which was the need of the hour for the organisation which was suffering from financial backdrops. Organisation was finding it difficult to enquire about the existing issues which were pulling their business down. Many problems were circulating inside the organisation like unstructured supply chain and human resource management. As the owners were too young for the business, they lacked proper experience in the business. Nativity of the owners also played an important role in the business. They followed the Indian style of business in a city like Hamilton which is too small compared to India. Every nation has its unique business which should be analysed by the indigenous small immigrant business personals. The supply chain of the organisation was at the premature state which lacked proper planning of the product procurement. The products were procured without any planned chart and it affected the entire supply chain process.

This research analysis conducted by to understand the security measurements of The Brand Outlet Company. The literature review is done after identify the objectives to undertake this research. Under literature review author is given theoretical aspects and how that theoretical models can use in the company current situation. For gathering data, author has used several methods. But he basically choose the qualitative data method since due to given time and nature of the business and nature of the research it's the convenient method for data gathering for this project. Since this is a pop up store business, it was hard for author to gather and contact employees. Since they involved with their other jobs. So basically author has to communicate with them over the phone or through emails. To understand the importance to the customers of security and safety, author interviews two customers which they can suggest and recommend some strategies as third party. The research questioner is basically to conduct and gather ideas about the current safety and security of the company and also to understand, what are the ways companies should undertake to improve the security measurements for better safe environment within the store which customers and the staff get safe inside the store. After analyzing the data and customer and staff information, author given some recommendations which company should consider while conducting the business. Because due to theft each sales period the store loose around $500 -1000 worth of products. When looking at big picture this is a huge loss for the company and putting staff and customers life in danger by letting security error in the store premises.

Abstract
Weighted score is being placed on organisation disclosures. As disclosures of information are very essential for the functioning of profit and non-profit organisations, it is required to disclose information to stakeholders through different ways such as interim and quarterly reports, and annual reports. Annual report is found to be the most vital sources of information about the companies’ activities, financial and non-financial information and future information for each particular company. By using annual reports, stakeholders are getting updated with the company’s quarterly and annually performances. To measure the level of information disclosed in annual reports, disclosure indices are used to measure and assess the level of information. By using disclosure index, researchers can tell which information that companies find the most important and which are the least importance. This study investigates, assess and measure the level of disclosures in annual reports of Consumer Service Industry and Financial Industry. To do this research, there were eight sampled companies, 20 selected items and four sampled stakeholder groups used to measure and compare the level of disclosures for both industries. The results of this study showed that Consumer Services industry disclose more information to its stakeholders than financial industry. It was found that the highest stakeholder that both industries disclose information to is the Shareholder whereas Community has the least disclosures.

Abstract

Society perceives and expects more from auditor’s than what auditors can actually achieve. Society has been found to misperceive the role of an auditor, in particular, in regards to fraud, internal controls and going concern issues. Society’s differing perceptions and expectations of the auditing profession is known as the audit expectation gap.

This study aims to explore the audit expectation gap’s existence among Wintec accounting students and the effect that education has on the audit expectation gap. This research intends to answer two research questions. First, does an audit expectation gap exist among Wintec accounting students? Second, what is the effect of education on the audit expectation gap?

To answer these research questions, 20 Wintec accounting students have been interviewed. Ten students who have received an audit education, and ten students who have not received audit education. Qualitative data was collected from these interviews and analysed using a mixed methods approach.
This study found that an audit education exists among Wintec accounting students. This study also found that education reduced the audit expectation gap, in particular, the deficient performance gap and the communication gap. However, while education did reduce the audit expectations gap, it was not eliminated.

This study recommends that Wintec provides a more basic auditing education during introductory accounting papers, educating students on the role of an auditor. This study also recommends that education focuses on the practical use of an audit report, to increase student’s understandings of the information in the audit report, and how this information is communicated. Thus, the researcher believes that these recommendations will help to further reduce the audit expectation.

In retailing, consumers typically patronize multiple outlets. Two potential avenues for increasing customer share are to raise customer satisfaction and increase repeat purchase. This study examines the effects of customer satisfaction through implementing innovative marketing strategy and online marketing. Customer satisfaction with a company's products or services is often seen as the key to a company's success and long-term competitiveness. In the context of customer relationship marketing, customer satisfaction is often viewed as a central determinant of customer retention. However, the few empirical investigations in this area indicate that a direct relationship between these constructs is weak or even non-existent. That is the reason businesses always try find different ways to keep in contact with the customers.

This article involves a critical examination of the online marketing, customer profiling and the development of a more comprehensive strategy to attract customers. To provide further variety of choice for the customers, you will see that I have also introduced an international aisle.

You will see that the result provides positive support for introducing online marketing and separate international aisle at PAK'nSAVE (Mill Street) to improve customer satisfaction.

Abstract
The New Zealand (NZ) property market is “booming” with over-inflated house prices (Norton, 2017). A shortage of housing exists in the market, struggling to meet the extensive demand of population growth. With large numbers of property transactions in the market making significant untaxed capital gain, property is a desirable investment (Helm, 2014). Untaxed capital gain is a key election topic for NZ in the 2017 general election (Duncan D. G., 2016)

The impacts on the housing market include; population growth, housing shortage, taxation policy and the general election. The aim of this research was to understand the specific impact of capital gains taxation policy on the New Zealand housing market, considering the other fore mentioned impacts.

NZ has inconsistent tax policy around housing, specifically capital gains taxation (CGT) (Cheng, 2010). Current tax policies impact the housing market, however these policies vary across NZ legislation and focus on tax policies to control investors in the market. The key legislation for the housing market is The Income Tax Act 2007 and The Taxation (Bright-Line Test for Residential Land) Act 2015.
When considering the impact of tax policy on the housing market, it is recommended that the NZ Government implements a tax working group to assess the entire taxation system in NZ. A specific focus should be applied to capital gains tax policy and creating impact on the housing market. Any solution needs to create a balance of impact between investors and members of NZ communities.

The Liquor Retail industry in New Zealand is highly fragmented and controlled by strict government rules and regulations. With the growing competition and challenges, the retailers are facing problems in retaining customers and their loyalty. From my 3 years work experience at Thirsty Liquor Raglan, I came to a conclusion that cost leader is very hard to improve the sales revenue. But the chances of growth in sales revenue with Differentiation strategy are more. Thus, the study examined the various methods by which Porter Differentiation strategy can be applied to a Liquor store to increase the sales revenue. The business external and internal environment has been analysed using SWOT (Strength, Weakness, Opportunities and Threats) and PESTLE (Political, Economic, Social, Technical and Legal tools. The social context of the business is explaining the direct, indirect and replacement competitors. The literature review covers primary research on the following topics such as Porters three generic strategies, sales revenue methods, challenges in liquor business and case study of previous similar project. The porter generic theory explained that how and why differentiation is linked to retail business. The sales revenue covers methods to calculate revenue from sales, and explains the major circumstances in a liquor business. In case study similar survey and results related to report has been discussed. Several methods like Interviews, surveys and observations are carried over as secondary research platforms. The results and key finding then aligned with primary research. The key findings from research are discussed in the report. According to the key findings and research through interviews of business expert –owner and National manager, observations of competitors and customer survey the sales of the Raglan liquor store can be improved with some of the unique features like Store layout, better deals, expansion of store, supplier support, active social media and buying an another liquor store.

Abstract
Nowadays many non-profit charitable organizations are confronted increasing pressure in raising funds due to the decreasing participants and donation. There has been also too many charitable organisations seeking funds through whatever means. However, comparing with most charity events, DGR Hamilton, a motorcycling charity event, gained remarkable success in its inaugural year (2016) in Hamilton. And the wonderful event experience of participants is the reason behind the success of DGR. Therefore, the components that contribute to people’s event experience are various and complex. For figuring out how to make the charity events different from the rest and creating a better event experience for participants, the researcher reviews the theories related to the definition of event design and components of participants’ event experience, then applies Rossman’s event mapping theory on DGR 2017, Hamilton to outline elements that the event organizer uses to influence the participants’ experience. A questionnaire is developed for checking the effects of these elements from rider’s feedbacks to explore a detailed understanding of the success of DGR and identify critical factors that could be used for future improvement in DGR and other charity events. Distinguished Gentlemen’s Ride (DGR) Hamilton, 2017. A ride to help save men’s health. Gentlemen (and gentle folks) got together for fun, socializing together and for charity. This report will show our great successes.

The project is conducted to investigate the impact of inventory management on performance and customer satisfaction of vaping business in New Zealand. The manager or an employee (hereon referred as a respondent in the report) from 18 random vaping companies of New Zealand with their sales and stock values are selected for the study. A questionnaire has been developed, designed and distributed as an instrument and the information was gathered and analysed for the research.

The information was collected from different sources such as books, article, journals, reports and different websites. For the purpose of data analysis, Pearson’s correlation and regression analysis are used. The response provided by the respondents of different companies are rated in the scale from 1 to 6 and analysed and has been presented using quantitative analysis technique and graphical charts. The result shows that there is a strong positive relation of inventory management with company’s performance and customer satisfaction.

Moreover, it can be noticed that the inventory must be ordered as per their proper requirement as the improper inventory management can result in excess or shortfall of inventory which effects both sales and customer satisfaction level of the company.

Abstract
The concept of CSR disclosure of listed companies has a significant interest in New Zealand over the last decades. The international data displays that there is significant relationship between CSR and financial performance of the companies. This current study tries to discover the relationship among sales, PAT and CSR activities by taking the data of 18 listed companies in New Zealand. These 18 companies grouped into two categories as oil & chemical manufacturing companies and food processing & beverages companies which are listed in New Zealand stock exchange. A correlation and regression techniques has been used to find the relationship of CSR with sales and PAT.

CSR is considered as foundation to understand the responsibilities of companies toward the society. Every organization has some responsibilities toward the society. If companies do not meet that responsibilities, they cannot survive and their product cannot be accepted.

The study results shows that there is not significant positive relationship among the Sales, PAT and CSR. There are many other factors that have also impact on the financial performance of the companies.

Abstract
Café industry is one of the major industry that contributes to the economy of New Zealand. Because of the tempestuous flow of tourists in the country, the organisations has to go through several hurdles to run their business firmly and successfully. The research aims to transverse the supply chain management practices at café industry and the challenges the organisations face while implementing the processes involved in supply chain management.

To find the relevant information regarding the supply chain management at the organisations a survey is conducted with the employees and other members that are linked to the supply chain of an organisation. In the survey the focus was to know about the processes that are involved, factors that influence the cost and demand in supply chain and the challenges in the productivity that the organisation come across while managing. In the research the types of suppliers are researched and the technology used by the suppliers. It is also been surveyed if the methods used by the suppliers are ideal for the organisation or not.

After conducting all the interviews it is deduced that the organisation use appropriate strategies like just in time, training to the supply chain members, multi sourcing of the suppliers, keeping good relations with the supplier that helps the organisation in reducing costs and work for future development of their supply chain management. However it would be more appropriate if organisation buy products in batches and hire more reliable supply chain members to overcome the challenges they face.

Abstract

New Zealand is a beautiful country which is built on the shores of the sea. It is divided into two islands and people from different continents like Asia, Europe and America come to New Zealand to enjoy scenic locations and the natural beauty of the landscapes. They plan their holidays in different locations of the country and like to wander and check out the places in short span of time. Backpacker accommodation is the best choice of stay, as it is economical and easily accessible. Backpacker Central Hamilton (BCH) is one of them.

Making profit is the main motive of every profit-organization. So, every organization has some strategies to be at the top of the game by increasing their revenues and growth of the business. The attempt here in this report is to know about the generic business strategies of the BCH- What strategies they have been using in the past, what they are using now and what they will use in future to elevate their profit and stabilize business growth.

This research explains Porter’s generic business strategies, Competitive advantage. It shows the difference between Backpackers and Backpacker Accommodation. Many people have a biased opinion about the Backpacker and in this research, an attempt is made to understand the operational and executional strategies of backpackers mainly BCH.

In this project, the data is collected through a structured questionnaire completed by customers as well as employees of BCH. The data is also collected by interviewing the manager at the premises. Three employees filled the employee questionnaire and twenty-six customers filled the questionnaire. The data is thoroughly analyzed.

The study findings revealed that BCH is using differentiation strategy to beat their competitors and to heighten their profits. The employee survey demonstrates the changes they made to their organizations, these are favorable for the business.

The suggestions and recommendations for business success and prosperity are also mentioned at the end of the report by investigating, evaluating and analyzing all the data. These suggestions and recommendations can help the business to increase or maintain a stable profit in the market.

Abstract
The accounting profession has evolved over time in accommodation with factors such as organisational growth, technological advances and the furtherance in what enterprises need from accountants. These factors, among others, have contributed to a need for change. One of the most important changes believed to be seen in the accounting profession is in the information systems technology advancement. Systems now have the ability to revolutionise the way accountants do business and is an important topic when firms are in the process of selecting which system is best suited for their practice.

While there are many differences between Big Four and small accounting firms, is the particular accounting system used one of them? This research will look at the evolution of the profession and how this has contributed to the need for change. It will also look at the top systems used in New Zealand accounting firms and analyse the differences in large and small scale firms in order to determine factors contributing to the speculated difference in systems used.

The research will follow qualitative research method analysis with secondary source data collection. Literature published by other researchers will be analysed in order to distinguish trends and discrepancies to support the research topic. The literature obtained will contribute to the research problem of identifying why firms need to change systems and the reasons why one system is selected over another.

The research aim is to develop a framework that will identify the key considerations that should be acknowledged in the decision process of selecting a system. This framework will aid organisations in their process and provide guidance on the type of system that is deemed to be best suited for their practice.

Abstract

NewSave supermarket is a Chinese supermarket in Hamilton, New Zealand. So far, the major customer base of NewSave supermarket is Chinese. However, relying on a single customer base will not be able to meet the future development of NewSave supermarket. The main purpose of this paper is to expand and retain customer base for NewSave supermarket, and through understanding and analyzing the buying habit and product preference of local customers such as Kiwi. Results indicated that the advertising platform and the form used by NewSave supermarket cannot effectively attract the attention of local customers. Likewise, local customer believe that environment and product quality are two very important elements of supermarket. However, the results indicated that the environment and product quality of NewSave supermarket does not make local customer feel high satisfied. In addition, according to the research results, to improve product differentiation competitive advantage can not only help NewSave supermarket to save costs, but also can help NewSave supermarket to rich product varieties, to adapt the needs of more local customers, and then to expand and retain customer base for NewSave supermarket.

Abstract

This research paper reports on forensic accounting related skills, knowledge, and experience currently in demand by New Zealand employers. By researching what criteria are looked for in a potential candidate when placing online job advertisements with specific search sites. The literature review looks at the state of accounting education in general and where it is possibly heading with specialised areas such as forensic accounting. The literature review also looks at the emerging role of the forensic accountant. The aim of the research is to answer two questions regarding forensic accounting. In what capacity does forensic accounting take place, and what criteria need to be met for job seeker wishing to enter the field of forensic accounting. The research is conducted by collecting relevant online job advertisements over a specified time and qualitatively analysing the information gathered. Results showed that in New Zealand forensic accounting aspects are being integrated into existing fields like auditing and finance, more than strengthening the more specialised field of forensic accounting on its own. This report recommends that further research needs to be done, specifically for New Zealand, as not much material seems to be available. Also for further study to be conducted into whether the skills and knowledge employers are looking for can be taught in tertiary education to provide a faster entrance into forensic accounting field as a profession.

Abstract
The operation of small-scale businesses has become increasingly important in New Zealand within the past decade. Several government programs have led to a push towards self-owned entrepreneurial endeavors throughout the country. One of these small businesses, is Silverdale Produce Planet (SPP) on Silverdale Road in Hamilton, New Zealand. After observations, it was noted that there was an extreme need for a new strategic approach to increase the customer base at SPP which would lead to an eventual increase in profit. In order to prevent further loss of business, this project used literature review outlining the important processes and operations involved in small-businesses centered around fresh produce, mixed research methods which was made up of both qualitative and quantitative parts, and lastly data analysis, to compile a list of best strategies tailored to SPP. These strategies consisting of pricing and promotion, waste management systems, customer retention techniques, and partnerships, can be implemented by SPP management to observe a notable increase in business and overall profitability.

Abstract
Organisation customers were surveyed. Based on the result, the store usually attractive medium income and medium to high income customers. There are 34% people’s annual income around $50,000 to $80,000. Medium income group have 26%, and people who have more than $80,000 annual income are 23%. The lower income level which is less than $30,000 having 17%. Most of customers are highly like to come back which is 66%. 20% people deemed they are likely to come back to Sian Sushi. However, still have 14% customers highly unlikely to come back. Therefore, there is the further research to understand why those consumers are highly likely and unlikely to come back Sian Sushi. Most highly likely people deemed the reason why Sian Sushi can attract them to come back include three main points: taste, quality, and customer service. The product quality has the most satisfaction (94%), followed by the customer service (74%). Finally, it is the taste (69%). This shows that Sian Sushi should maintain the superiority such as product quality, in order to sustain the customer loyalty program. However, people who highly unlikely to come back Sian Sushi because of expensive price, poor facilities, and unattractive signboard. Especially in the field of price that is too expensive, which is 63% are highly unlikely. In terms of facilities, people generally think that the seats and tables are little bit old, and the music is not suitable at all. This shows that Sian Sushi may need to make some changes to retain customers. For example, the price can provide discount, replacement facilities and signboard.
