SCHOOL OF MEDIA AND COMMUNICATION
SHANGHAI JIAO TONG UNIVERSITY

Shanghai Jiao Tong University (SJTU) is a leading institution of higher learning not only in China, but also in the world. SJTU's School of Media and Communication (SMC) has also earned its place in the area of new media with its unique feature of combination of art and science, internationalization and Industry-University-Research integration.

Dean of School of Media and Communication at Shanghai Jiao Tong University, "Changjiang" Scholar and Distinguished Professor Li Benqian presented trophies to winners in "China through My Eyes": Short Video Contest for International Students in China.

1 ACADEMIC RANKING
OF SMC'S JOURNALISM AND COMMUNICATION DISCIPLINE

- Category A Discipline (Top 5%) as designated by China's Ministry of Education.
- Ranked third in China based on the Academic Ranking of World Universities (ARWU) in December 2019.
- First-Class Bachelor Program in China's "Double First-Class" university project

2 PROGRAMS

3 FACULTY

There are 65 full-time faculty in SMC. 80% of them have Ph.D. degrees. Among them there are:
- 3 "Changjiang" Scholars designated by China's Ministry of Education: 1 Distinguished Professor and 2 Visiting Professors;
- 2 leading talent of philosophy and social sciences in the National "10000 Talent" Plan;
- 4 Experts on Special Government Subsidy under the State Council;
- 13 Chief Expert for major national projects of social sciences;
- 1 ESI Highly Cited Paper author;
- 5 "Cross/New Century" Talents designated by China's Ministry of Education.

4 RESEARCH

SMC faculty have published more than 500 journal articles and 300 books. They have also won over 30 ministry-level awards with their research. There are 26 Key National Social Science Projects and over 100 ministry-level research projects chaired by SMC faculty.

2019 ICA-affiliated New Media International Conference in SJTU organized by SMC

SMC held the first "China through My Eyes": Short Video Contest for International Students in China.
5 STUDENTS

- There are almost 1000 students studying in SMC now and nearly 300 are international students originating from 58 countries.
- SMC's programs taught in English attract nearly 300 international students originating from 58 countries. Many graduated from world prestigious universities like Princeton University, University of Chicago, University of California-Los Angeles, Moscow University and University of Westminster.
- SMC students have made substantial contribution to various fields over the years. SMC alumna Chen Yingqian won Hollywood Best Student Documentary award and Best Cultural Documentary award. Now she is a Phoenix TV Journalist at UN headquarter. "Nan Nan," a short film directed by SMC's undergraduate Xie Jing, was screened at the 2018 International Short Film Festival in Berlin. "The Verse of Us," directed by the school's alumnus Wu Feiyue, won Best Documentary Award at the Shanghai International Film Festival. Doctoral student Yang Xiaoxiao won the Silver Cup in the "Challenge Cup", a national entrepreneurship contest.

Students and faculty of SMC invited to visit HUAWEI headquarter

"The Verse of Us" directed by the SMC alumnus Wu Feiyue won Best Documentary Award at the Shanghai International Film Festival

Chen Yingqian won Hollywood Best Student Documentary award, Best Cultural Documentary award, and the Emmy Award Scholarship in 2016. Now she is a Phoenix TV Journalist at UN headquarter.

6 INDUSTRY-UNIVERSITY-RESEARCH INTEGRATION

- SMC has 20 research institutes including National Social Sciences Fund Consultancy Base, Public Opinion Institute and "Culture and Tourism Research Base" for the Ministry of Culture and Tourism.
- It has also built partnership with renowned enterprises such as Tencent.com, Bytedance, Sina.com, Baidu.com and Shanghai United Media Group.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

GENERAL INFORMATION

Headquarters hotel: Your home! Whether an urban retreat, a rural oasis, the beach, or somewhere in between, we are certain you will feel right at home during the conference!

Parking: Self-parking: free! Valet: sadly unavailable

Service animals and pets: Both allowed, and welcome to join you during your presentation.

Business Office: Your printer may be out of ink, but that's ok, everything is virtual. There are probably some dried-out highlighters in your desk drawer if you need them.

Families: Your lodging offers cribs and cots that are exactly the ones your children are used to, and dining options all offer children's menus and high chairs. Your children are also welcome to join you for your presentation.

Fitness Center/Spa: The Health Club features a wide selection of random mismatched hand weights, large soup cans and bags of rice that can be lifted in a pinch, and a random lint-strewn tennis ball that can be sandwiched between your shoulder blade and the wall if you need a massage. Access to the health club is complimentary for all guests. The sauna is available to one party at a time and involves turning on very hot water in the shower whilst sitting on a closed toilet seat and playing candy crush while having a glass of wine.

Medical Information: In most cases, no medical doctors reside on premises. In case of emergencies, please dial your local emergency number immediately.

Concierge: If the concierge is not reachable, our host city, the internet, has a number of entertainments to peruse. We are happy to provide recommendations for food delivery or curbside pickup, directions from your living room to your kitchen, and information about great shows to binge watch on Netflix. Just contact the concierge at #ica20 #ica20concierge

Registration Hours – all the hours   Exhibit Hours – all the hours

Registration: Registration will be located at https://www.icahdq.org/event/ICA20.
To check your country tier and associated registration fee, please visit https://www.icahdq.org/page/2020ConfPrices.

Exhibits: Exhibits will be located on the virtual platform, directly in front of you as you enter the Lobby (large entrance with double doors). We encourage you to take your food and coffee breaks in the Exhibit Hall just as you would during an in-person conference (because that's where we put the food)!

Lounge: The lounge area is where you can access ICA's social media feeds, and watch various avatars walk around like zombies. We're all waiting to see if any of them ever try to stand up from sitting in a bean bag chair. That should be fun.

Info Desk: Prominently located in, you guessed it, the Lobby, the Info Desk is where you can interact with both the ICA conference staff (it will be monitored by Jenifer Le and Katie Wolfe) and vFairs Help Desk. The lounge is to your right as you enter the lobby.

Posters: Posters will be on your right as you enter the lobby area, please click on the sign that says Posters.

Sessions: Plenary sessions, theme sessions, and division/interest group sessions can all be accessed by entering the Auditorium.

Membership: To join ICA, please consult with any person at the ICA Info Desk in the Lobby, or email membership@icahdq.org. We welcome members in all communication discipline from around the globe. You can also join online at https://www.icahdq.org/page/join_renew! We have discounts for Tier B and C countries and ICA membership, as you know, comes with a significant discount on conference registration.

Opening Reception: We do not have an opening reception this year. You can use the hashtags #ica20 and #ica20opening on 20 May to greet each other and catch up like you normally would during the opening reception.

Happy hours, virtual get-togethers, dance parties, etc: There will be numerous smaller virtual hangouts and division and interest group receptions conducted virtually via Animal Crossing, Mozilla Hubs, Zoom, etc. You can find a listing of these events in the Lounge area.

Accessibility & Inclusion: Thank you to those of you who made the effort to include captions in your presentation videos. Please also remember to include a link to an access copy in the chat if you have one. Thank you for helping us to make ICA and inclusive experience for all scholars!

Continuing Favorites:
- Childcare: We highly recommend following the CAM division for recommendations on apps for children, and we highly recommend Toca Train, Toca Kitchen, and the PBS Kids apps for fun, educational content for all ages.
- Yoga: https://www.latimes.com/lifestyle/story/2020-03-27/yoga-routines-for-coronavirus-quarantine
- Quiet Room: this is every room in your house. Unless you have kids, in which case there is no quiet room. Anywhere. Ever.
- AA Meetings: One real benefit of a virtual conference is that being away from home for over a week won't disrupt your schedule if you need to attend support meetings. If your local meeting is not currently happening in person, the AA website has a resource for finding virtual meetings during the pandemic: https://www.aa.org/press-releases/en_US/press-releases/aa-groups-using-digital-platforms-to-find-sobriety-during-coronavirus-covid-19-outbreak
- Other benefits of being at home:
  - all restrooms are gender-neutral!
  - Nursing mothers have all the privacy they want and a full-sized fridge to store breastmilk!
  - The coffee is so much better!
  - You didn't forget to pack your laptop charger!

CONFERENCE POLICIES

Who pays the conference registration fee? In a word, EVERYBODY. ICA is a voluntary, not-for-profit, tax-exempt organization analogous to churches, conservation groups, and others that qualify for the U.S. Internal Revenue Service's 501(c)3 tax-exempt status. Its annual conference program is comprised almost exclusively of competitively selected papers. There are very few "invited" papers in any ICA conference program; thus the ICA Board of Directors has established an "everybody pays" policy. That said, ICA does give out over US$60,000 in travel grants each year* based on need. If you would like to support travel grants please consider making a donation or renewing as a Sustaining Member, through which a portion of your dues would support student travel. (Travel grants did not occur this year because no one traveled; we have redirected those in need to apply for the Hardship Fund).

To Tweet or Not to Tweet? Many presenters are happy to have their talks and content shared on social media, but others aren't comfortable yet with "going public." What might be ready for a conference audience might not be ready for The World At Large. The policy of the Board of Directors is that each presenter can and should indicate a preference, and that presenters' preferences should be respected. To that end, we encourage you to make your wishes known at the beginning of your presentation. Please note that as it becomes cumbersome to include all the social media icons for affirmative or negative requests, one should consider the "no tweet" or "ok to tweet" symbols as referring to all social media.

If you are happy to be the subject of social media posts: we recommend you indicate as such at the beginning of your talk both verbally and on your slides, possibly including your own Twitter handle as well. If you didn't think of doing this before recording, you can still indicate this in the chat next to your video once you log in to the platform.

If you are not comfortable having your information shared on social media: Please include the "no tweets" symbol on your first slide and call attention to this verbally. We also recommend placing the "no tweets" symbol in the corner of any particular slides you wish not to be photographed, tweeted, or otherwise shared on social media (as this both alerts latecomers to the request and makes it obvious if someone does take a photo that it is not to be shared, as the symbol will be in the photo). If you didn't think of doing this before recording, you can still indicate this in the chat next to your video once you log in to the platform.

70TH ANNUAL ICA CONFERENCE
PRE/POSTCONFERENCES

PRECONFERENCES

Digital Cultures of South Asia: Inequalities, Infrastructures, Informatization

Affiliations

South Asia Communication Association (SACA), Global Communication & Social Change, Popular Communication, Intercultural Communication, and Ethnicity & Race in Communication

Organizers

Radhika Parameswaran (Indiana U), Sangeet Kumar (Denison U), Kalyani Chadha (U of Maryland), Adrian Athique (U of Queensland) and Pradip Thomas (U of Queensland)

ICA's 2020 Digital Cultures of South Asia virtual pre-conference—with over 25 presenters from five different countries—brings together established and emerging scholars whose innovative work investigates key dimensions of a vibrant digital culture in the South Asian region. As the first ICA pre-conference to spotlight digital media research in South Asia, this day long event seeks to address the yawning gap in the field of digital media and cultural studies on a crucially important region in the global south that is predicted to shape the future of the global Internet. Keeping this goal in mind, our program offers a curated collection of cutting-edge research contributions that touch on a range of salient topics, from creator culture, digital media economies and policies, electoral politics, fake news and misinformation to the gender, caste and class inequalities that continue to structure digital divides. By creating an inclusive and interdisciplinary tent that brings together stakeholders of all hues (scholars, practitioners and media activists), we expect our day-long virtual event to provide a launchpad for future conversations that push the boundaries of research on the digital dimensions of South Asian life.

Digital Media in Latin America

Affiliations

Journalism Studies Division

Organizers

Pablo J. Boczkowski, Eddy Borges-Rey, Miriam Hernandez, Ezequiel Korin, Eugenia Mitchelstein, Magdalena Saldaña & María Celeste Wagner

This preconference aims to examine the production, distribution, and consumption of digital media in Latin America. It is a follow up to the pre-conference on Digital Journalism in Latin America that was part of the 2019 annual meeting of the International Communication Association. For this second edition, we have broadened the scope to include all digital media practices, not just journalism, to create a platform that can showcase the richness of a wider variety of relevant research in and about Latin America. Research about Latin America -and Latin American researchers- tend to be underrepresented in Communication scholarship in general, and in ICA in particular. For instance, the 2018 Conference featured only 38 papers in total about South American countries -including 15 about Brazil and 12 about Chile- and out of the hundreds of scholars who presented their work, only 21 were based in that region.

Open Questions in Human-Machine Communication

Organizers

> Autumn Edwards (Western Michigan U, USA)* Eleanor Sandry (Curtin University, Australia) Andrea Guzman (Northern Illinois U, USA) Chad Edwards (Western Michigan U, USA) Steve Jones (U of Illinois at Chicago, USA) Patric Spence (U of Central Florida, USA) S. Austin Lee (Chapman U, USA) David Gunkel (Northern Illinois U, USA) Jaime Banks (Texas Tech U, USA) Seungahn Nah (U of Oregon, USA)

The fifth annual pre-conference on Human-Machine Communication (HMC) aims to identify and explore the most pressing "open questions" surrounding communication between humans and technologies, such as chatbots, social robots and smart assistants. Scholars should address what they see as important open questions concerning the exchange of messages and creation of meaning between people and physical or virtual digital interlocutors, toward progressing theoretical and/or practical breakthroughs in relation to communication with these technologies and the discourses surrounding them. The pre-conference is open to all sorts of scholarship, both empirical and theoretical, quantitative and qualitative.

Rethinking the Relationship between Migration, Media, and Technology in Times of Crises within and beyond the West

Affiliations

> Global Communication and Social Change Division, Intercultural Communication Division, Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender & Queer Interest Group

Organizers

> Radhika Gajjala, Bowling Green State U; Lukasz Szulc, University of Sheffield; Emily Edwards, Bowling Green State U; Soumia Bardhan, U of Colorado Denver; Amanda Paz Alencar, Erasmus U Rotterdam

The main purpose of this conference is to provide a space for open dialogue about the ways media technologies are shaping and are shaped by migratory movements and processes, and with the goal to set guidelines for collaborative research on a variety of issues and axes related to migration, media and technologies. Furthermore, it aims to advance our understanding of the role researchers play in promoting open communication strategies and platforms to bridge academic and popular debates on these timely and contentious issues.

This pre-conference, if accepted, will be a special forum for Communication and the Public (CAP), a joint publication by Zhejiang University and SAGE, launched in 2016. In past years, we organized two successful pre-conferences, including Varieties of Publics and Counterpublics, in 2017 and Data and Publics in 2018. For more information about the journal, please visit http://ctp.sagepub.com/. It is aimed to publish selected papers from the presentations in a special issue of CAP.

Visual Politics: Image Production, Perception, and Influence

Organizers

Images are ubiquitous in contemporary politics. From television coverage of campaigns and elections to visual memes and images of leaders circulated on social media, visual portrayals shape perceptions of the political world. As efficient carriers of social and symbolic information, they are quickly assessed, rapidly judged, and readily remembered—even when manipulated or released as deepfakes. Despite growing evidence of influence, visuals remain understudied within media politics. This preconference brings together visual scholars from different research traditions and international perspectives to present state of the art studies of image production, perception, and influence in the contemporary political landscape.

Opportunities, Tensions, and Challenges of Global Higher Education

Affiliations

> Instructional and Developmental Communication Division

Organizers

Erik Bucy (Texas Tech, USA), Cristian Vaccari (Loughborough, UK)

The pre-conference has been designed to extend the topics traditionally discussed in the Instructional and Developmental Communication Division, moving from the traditional focus on classroom interactions and including institutional-level dynamics, also from a critical perspective.   The pre-conference is intended to be a forum to jointly discuss current challenges and future directions regarding Global Higher Education, also considering the booming of International Branch Campuses in the Asia Pacific region. The pre-conference will target a broader, new audience from teaching-intensive global institutions and international branch-campuses (from administrator to instructors) located in the Asian/Pacific regions, hence relatively close to Bond University campus. To incentivize the submissions from such teaching-intensive institutions, the pre-conference will consider not only full research paper but also shorter, also reflection based, contributions in the area of teaching and learning. Moreover, our pre-conference will offer to its participants the opportunity to see their manuscripts considered for publication in two, forthcoming edited books to be published by IGI Global.

Visual Representation and Marginality: Opening New Conversations

In 2020, ICA travels to the antipodes in Australia, home of the world's oldest continuous civilization, and, in doing so, presents a unique opportunity to understand how visual representation at the margins has been understood by different groups, for different purposes, and in different ways over time. The visual representation of marginalized groups has tended to be shaped by dominant groups. Because images are so powerful, memorable and emotionally charged, such representations have historically worked to perpetuate hierarchies, stereotypes and barriers to full participation in the public sphere. De-marginalizing communities, therefore, requires that we investigate the role of visual communication in oppression and liberation. Before pathways can be opened for improved communication, it is necessary to understand the obstacles of the past. In the digital age, participation in the visual public sphere is as critical as ever to the human condition. The notions of visuality and visibility, too, and the interplay between them, are other key considerations this pre-conference hopes to encourage discussion on, as the struggle for visibility often involves images politics and is inherently connected to marginality, counter-hegemony, resistance, and advocacy. These phenomena can take visual form as images but can also transcend them and manifest more broadly as material culture, performativity, bodily expressions of identity, etc. We conceptualize visual broadly, "from dreams and cognitive theory through gesture and geography, as well as issues concerning visual ethics, visual ecology, representation, visual media in all forms, and visual behavior."

Organizers
Terry Flew

The last five years have seen a sea change in debates around regulation of digital platforms. There is a growing view that nation-state regulation is warranted to address public concerns about the market power, lack of accountability and lack of transparency of the leading tech giants. This symposium will bring together communications and media policy and industry researchers to consider critical issues around digital platform regulation.

Bringing together theories of intersectionality, witnessing, solidarity and media activism, the panel unpacks the urgent contemporary challenges for social justice communication.

Teaching philosophies have become critical job search and annual review components around the world. They represent academics' beliefs, values, and goals about teaching and learning. Graduate programs spend significantly more time on research than teaching philosophies, which are unique to the person writing it; there are more and less effective ways of showcasing one's teaching prowess. This workshop provides guidance on crafting a teaching philosophy/portfolio as well as feedback on their current teaching philosophy.

Blue Sky Professional Development Workshop: The Magic of Unguided Longhand Freewriting

Scholars who research children face a number of ethical issues. This workshop is motivated by a shared concern that the human dignity of children is honored, and that their rights and well-being are respected in all forms of communication research. These ethical issues are compounded when children come from marginalized communities. The panelists for this workshop work with some of our most vulnerable children and adolescents and will share their expertise with interested ICA members.

Openness extends beyond access to publications, including to real life aspects of communication as a field. Opening doors and pathways into communication remains a critical project to keep our field vital, vibrant, and reflective of the communities in which we live. Openness requires a strategic training and mentoring of under-represented populations, from students through junior and senior faculty, some of whom become influential administrators. This session brings together underrepresented communication scholars from diverse institutions (from undergraduate-focused to Ph.D. programs) to discuss best practices in communication pedagogy and mentoring. We pursue the question of "how do we open the doors of communication so that our field represents the breadth and depth of diversity in our communities?" We also consider the approaches and impact of doing institutional work in order to pry open spaces previously closed to us.

BLUE SKY WORKSHOP: Losing My Religion: How to Build a Career Outside the Academy

Blue Sky Workshops

This panel consists of five papers, which together elucidate how different patterns of social media use among different adolescent users relate to indicators of well-being. Further, given rapid changes in the social media landscape, these presentations offer comparisons across platforms in order to understand differences in platform features. Overall, these presentations contribute to theory regarding adolescent social media use and offer different methodological considerations in the measurement and study of social media among adolescents.

Technology has implications on many family roles, behaviors, and practices. Parental mediation, sharenting, and device distractions ("technoference") create sources of tension and power within the family dynamic. Scholars in this session will address parenting decisions, behaviors, and family practices in various cultures as parents and youth navigate the digital age together.

Questions about children's educational television have moved from if children can learn from media to what makes for ideal learning practices and content. Scholars in this session will examine both the content of educational and prosocial television as well as the characters and attributes that contribute to learning from these shows. In addition, mother/child co-viewing of educational television is examined to reveal benefits for co-viewers to further support this practice.

The potential for positive outcomes are much anticipated while the concerns of negative consequences are greatly feared. This hybrid high-density panel will examine various media uses of youth including parent/child interactions in infancy, children's one-to-one tablet practices at school and at home, and teens use of social networking sites and smartphones through qualitative and quantitative research approaches.

Technology allows friends separated by distance to keep in touch and initiate new friendships. Best friends share secrets including passwords as a token of trust and negative offline relationships with peers may result in more time spent online. Scholars in this session explore intersections between online and offline relationships and those between personal and parasocial relationships.

Adolescents encounter sexual messages and ideal body images across many screens and platforms. Concerns arise regarding the impact of this exposure on teen's sexual behaviors including sexting and body image leading to desires for cosmetic surgery. In this panel, scholars will discuss the implications of these media representations on teen's body image, body satisfaction, self-esteem, sexual self-efficacy, and sexual agency in different cultures.

Video gaming has grown from a leisure activity to an entire industry. Similarly, the type of research about video gaming and youth has expanded as well from a focus on negative outcomes such as aggression and addiction to socialization dynamics and games that motivate healthy choices. Scholars in this session address these changes through exploring longitudinal implications of video game play, short-term effects of design, and considering implications of gaming for future media research.

Today, terrorist attacks, natural disasters, protests, and revolutions have replaced the ceremonial "media events" that Dyan and Katz wrote about in their pathbreaking book of 1992. We extend and adapt theirs and more recent work on events to accommodate the context of global, multi-platform communications technologies. Our starting point is to address the methodological challenge of understanding how the current media landscape constructs events in ways that favour particular social and political outcomes.

China's most ambitious digital governance project – the Social Credit System (SCS) – has been the subject of intense international scrutiny for its dystopian surveillance potentials. With participants from Europe, North America and Asia, this panel debates about social credits systems inside China and beyond, historically and contemporarily, where the SCS can be understood as a national framework vs. local experimentations, state-driven vs. commercial; and the idea of social credits as Chinese vs. Western, ancient vs. contemporary.

This panel brings together researchers who use urban ethnography to examine changes in communication, local power and politics, and inequalities as the urban landscape is increasingly laced with digital technologies. Spanning a diverse set of cities across the world, we discuss in what ways mobile technologies, smart infrastructures, the platform economy, and data analytics circulate local stories, open up novel communication avenues, manufacture urban environments, and obfuscate and amplify longstanding divides in the city.

This panel asks two questions: What are dead and dying platforms? (RIP Vine) What are their futures and their pasts?
Drawing on case studies, we consider the forces and factors that kill platforms and the narratives and counter-narratives surrounding platform death and precarity. Together, nodding to certain forgotten corners of the internet, we draw upon different histories to piece together what the web was, what it is now, and what it could become.

Can basic science and our understanding of biology advance our understanding of social, cognitive, affective, and behavioral communication science? In this session, researchers aim to answer this question by examining the relationship between basic neural and physiological processes of communication.

The increasing relevance of social networking sites for news discovery has broadened research questions and methodological approaches in news research. This panel contributes to this research while providing a systematic comparison of different methodological approaches. Therefore, we gave one dataset on digital news engagement and textual content from twelve countries to different scholars along with one research question: How fragmented is news use within social networking sites? Results, methodological merits and challenges are discussed.

While enclosure of the ecological commons is a familiar heuristic, this panel considers the discursive commons as similarly vulnerable to processes of enclosure and over-extraction. The public's collective capacity to attend to environmental issues is a finite resource. Engaging the public, therefore, is a competitive and lucrative pursuit that arguably yields declining returns. This panel brings together researchers embedded in the complexity of environmental change to discuss how the discursive commons might be maintained.

"Better a Dead Son, Than a Gay Son": Media Coverage of Hate Crimes and Political Rhetoric Against LGBT Groups in Brazil and Mexico
> Miriam Hernández, California State U, Dominguez Hills, USA

This panel brings together international scholars working on understanding how hateful acts against minorities, marginalized and disenfranchised communities across the world are being covered in the media. We ask: What are the strategies used by media to cover hate crimes that are incited by racist and hateful political rhetoric? What are the communicative inequalities in place that form the infrastructures of digital media hate? We attempt to examine these questions in comparative fashion by including contributions that use media data from the USA, Mexico, Brazil, India, Singapore, and New Zealand.

Decolonizing Open Communication: Muslim Women and the Embodiment of White Femininity
> Haneen Al Ghabra, Kuwait U, KUWAIT

This panel argues that if open communication is the way to build better communication research, decolonizing methodologies is one tangible mode we can use to begin dismantling longstanding intellectual boundaries that ensure the reproduction of what has insofar been considered the only legitimate form of knowledge. Specifically, the panelists address how decolonial methods can be used to address myriad issues surrounding race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, class, nation, and the body. In so doing, the overall goal of this panel is to reframe open communication not just as a critical and reflexive practice, but also to ensure inclusivity, transparency, and dialogue.

Across Australian and British cultural and creative industries (CCIs) the topic of 'diversity' is high on the policy agenda. 'Diversity' discourse in the context of Western CCIs is underpinned by a multicultural politics that appears inclusive, yet very rarely mentions race let alone racism. This panel seeks to move beyond a notion of 'diversity' as an approach that can tackle social injustice, and instead explores how 'diversity' itself produces racial inequalities.

In this panel, we will be exploring racial and ethnic issues in and outside of academia, present strategies we are utilizing, and propose new approaches that transfer our research from theoretical to practical.

Drawing on research in Cambodia, Kenya, and China, this panel critically analyzes the complicated and sometimes contradictory manner in which technology is articulated to modes of (dis)empowerment for women in a range of sites – factories, rural villages and towns, and tech incubators – as they seek health-related knowledge, engage in e-commerce, and perform emotional "happiness" labor. The findings contribute theoretical insights into the constitutive nature of gender, technology, and empowerment and the implications for social change.

While the influence of esports is unquestionably on the rise, its operations and policies are much more opaque. This is particularly apparent in collegiate athletics where assimilation into college life remains haphazard. Building on an international body of research, this panel opens a dialogue around crucial cultural collegiate esports issues. Through both empirical and critical analysis it will set a professional, pedagogical and analytical agenda for this global phenomenon.

The cultures and countercultures of contemporary game development intersect at a number of tensions that are crucial for the emerging subdiscipline of 'game production studies.' By analyzing articulations of labour and creative work, the shared software and platforms of development and distribution, and their overlapping audiences, this panel probes this relationship between videogame production cultures and emerging countercultures, examining how software, studios, and game developers both acquiesce to and reimagine game development norms.

Rethinking Communication Studies From the Vantage Point of the Globally Disempowered
> Raka Shome, Villanova U, USA

The unprecedented expansion of digital communication in countries such as China, India and Brazil, at a time of relative decline of the US-led Western media, is transforming the global media and communication landscape. This panel examines the challenges of this for global communication studies and evaluates what reframing is required in communication studies in the 'post-American' world, given the scale and scope of the surge in media and communication outside the Euro-Atlantic zone.

This panel examines the global media dimensions of national commissions of inquiry and their capacity to advance social change. Inquiries represent a highly visible and globally resonant opportunity for national-level reflection, truth-seeking and public discussion. They are a national listening exercise, whereby the state 'bears witness' to individual experiences of past injustice. The panel showcases contemporary scholarship in this under-researched domain of study, critically examining the role of changing media in enabling or limiting justice and reconciliation.

Journalism's financial crisis has hit international reporting particularly hard, with Western media shuttering overseas bureaux and often relying on news agencies. But Western modes of reporting are also shifting towards journalism created by, or in cooperation with reporters from the global South. Financing for many media ventures is coming from philanthropic donors, NGOs, politically motivated organisations and state actors. This panel incorporates reporting models from Asia, Africa, Latin America, the Pacific and the Middle East.

The CCA foregrounds the methodological work of co-creating communication infrastructures for listening to the voices of the margins. We draw from our experiences carrying out culture-centered interventions across contexts to explore the frontiers of culture- centered processes in social change communication. The panel will put forth the key tenets of the CCA, the ways in which these tenets relate to creating communication infrastructures for subaltern voices, and the link between communication infrastructures and structural transformation.

The use of digital technology in classrooms has increased around the world, yet we know little about how teachers are incorporating this technology into their instructional practice to create meaningful learning environments. This panel brings together research that investigates teacher and parent attitudes toward technology, classroom technology use, teacher pedagogical practices, and teacher communication behaviors in schools. Results demonstrate that technology can support and alter teacher communication and pedagogy in powerful ways.

Most health-related interpersonal communication research has been conducted cross-sectionally and involves data from just one member of a dyad. To address this concern, this panel brings together scholarship on ongoing dyadic interactions regarding health. The papers on this panel engage a variety of interpersonal communication theories and a range of data collection techniques and methodologies to examine how couples, parents and children, college students and conversation partners, and grandparents and grandchildren talk about health information.

The rise of rightwing populist politics around the world has put journalists in a difficult place. While journalists experience pushback from political actors in nearly all media systems, the populist critique goes further in its efforts to delegitimize journalistic actors and news discourses as working against the interest of the people. The papers on this panel provide insight into how journalists respond to this political climate in a diverse array of settings.

This panel brings together scholars from twelve countries to discuss the lessons learned from the first wave of the Journalistic Role Performance (JRP) Project, its contributions, the main questions that need to be yet addressed, as well as the methodological challenges and blind spots that need to be overcome. The papers of this panel propose new conceptual frameworks on the relationship between attitudes and practice in journalism, theorizing on the interplay between roles, identity and journalistic cultures, the concept of hybridity, emerging roles in new media logics, the limitations of surveys in cross-national studies, and the implications of the level of analysis in the study of professional roles.

What are the opportunities and challenges that queer digital culture presents to people of different gender and sexual identities? What are the relationships between queer digital media and queer space, in the context of different regions where acceptance toward same-sex desire and practice varies? What consideration should researchers take in researching queer digital culture in cities where homosexuality still carries stigma?

Who Is the 'Mass' in Mass Communication Theory?
Herman Wasserman, U of Cape Town, SOUTH AFRICA

Throughout the history of our field, claims have been made that 'mass' media' 'communication' are concepts that do not fit the contemporary media environment (anymore). Instead of defending or abandoning our theoretical concepts and methods, the purpose of this panel is to return to the fundamental 'grand narrative' of our discipline. What is the study of mass communication, and what can it be to accommodate the truly mediatized and globalized environment within which we live?

The Operations of Mobile Hollywood
    Kevin Sanson, Queensland U of Technology, AUSTRALIA

Industry scholars have shown a growing concern with recovering forms and traces of "hidden" media labour whose industrial roles and impact were traditionally overlooked. Contributors to this panel explore these submerged and neglected forms of media work in 20th and 21st century sound and screen industries in Australia, the US, Mexico, and Europe, considering the critical implications and methodological challenges of tracking these workers and labour practices across different institutional, technological, and geopolitical contexts.

The term 'streaming' is now embedded in discourses about change in the media and digital industries. However, the way streaming has been taken up, and how the concept of streaming is understood, is extremely variable across different countries, industries and genres. This panel brings together case studies of streaming in order to enhance understanding of such international variability, and to ask in what ways is streaming altering or maintaining the dynamics of media industries?

This panel calls attention to East Asia's integration throughout the media industries to comprehend how advanced capitalism has led regional entities to develop cross-border, strategic, and contextual linkages, and how geographic conditions have complicated industrial dynamics and economic interactions. Each panelist examines Chinese-Korean interactions in television, film, pop music, and beauty industries. Critical cultural and transnational approaches are employed to illuminate the impact of regionalization in East Asia's media industries on globally networked systems.

Researching Dangerous and/or Difficult to Access Organizations: Insights From Experts in the Field
   Craig Scott, Rutgers U, USA

One of the reasons for the limited research related to various difficult to access and/or dangerous organizations (and their members) is the lack of methodological and practical guidance from experts within our field. This panel addresses that challenge by bringing together organizational communication experts from multiple institutions and countries to share their experiences and insights related to conducting research in, on, and about a wide range of these non-traditional and often hidden organizations.

The ways that gendered violence is present in women's organizational lives is examined via diverse contexts of the military, terrorism, sex work, separate spheres, and glass cliffs where gendered violence(s) are conceptualized as structural, interpersonal, and/or intrapersonal. Panelists explore how and why organizational members tolerate violence and offer situated recommendations for reducing gendered organizational violence.

This panel contributes to debates around online vitriol and disinformation by advancing theoretical insights into aspects of emotionality and political economy in a contextually rooted and historically sensitive global framework. Taking the conversations beyond transatlantic concerns around "filter bubbles" and "echo chambers", the panel engages with the theory of "extreme speech" and brings a set of theoretical reflections that seek to overcome the limitations of "hate speech" and "populist leadership" explanations in understanding these developments.

case studies in electronic surveillance and deepfakes, state-sponsored disinformation campaigns and digital activism across diverse geographic contexts. By focusing on uncertainty not as error or byproduct, but a normal aspect of the social life of digital media, the panel emphasises the role of ambiguity, speculation and imagination in the contemporary crisis of information and credibility online.

It also engages the broader question of the compatibility of existing economic and business models with democracy. The panel provides a series of avenues for intervening in the discussion about how best to respond to the political pathologies associated with the rise of social media.

Digital tools are deeply integrated into elections. But digital data is expensive, technically hard to collect and share, and the access and use of this data is constantly changing because platforms (and our use) are constantly changing. This panel is organized as a discussion around four key questions related to how researchers can track elections. Each panelist draws on their experience researching specific issues in recent elections in Brazil, Canada, India, and the U.S.

What are the big questions political communication research should be focused on? What are the significant challenges and opportunities in different areas of the field? What do we need to do to move political communication research forward? This panel brings together scholars working on various topics to assess the state of the field in their area of focus and to talk about the big questions that should animate our research.

A massive antigovernment protest launched in June 2019 has brought Hong Kong to the world's attention. Behind the movement is no shortage of essential topics in political communication, such as partisan media and selective exposure, the increasing influence of social media and messaging apps (e.g., Telegram), and the hybridized identity of Chinese and Hong Kong people. The panel aims to empirically articulate the communication issues behind the ongoing protest and public opinion dynamics in Hong Kong.

The theme for the ICA PD and ISA ICOMM joint panel at ICA 2020 is "Country Images and Public Diplomacy in times of Populism". The aim is to continue the conversation and debate started at ISA2020 joint panel on the different theoretical and disciplinary camps that work on public diplomacy issues and how they address emerging global issues. We will focus on populism and PD and will explore it from an interdisciplinary perspective, bringing together communication and IR scholars.

In modern international politics, "whose story wins" (Joseph Nye Jr.) is critical for the influence and reputation of states. Public Diplomacy (PD) is a central means by which governments communicate their stories to foreign audiences and has an important place in the diplomatic toolkits of political regimes worldwide. This panel presents new research that broadens the PD research agenda theoretically, methodologically and empirically. It espouses a pluralist perspective and includes papers from different disciplinary backgrounds.

In this panel, we focus on the reputational concerns related to and trust in autonomous systems, and how public relations might facilitate engagement around these rapidly proliferating intermediaries. We argue that in the face of algorithmic opacity, not only trust becomes a key resource but expectations about accountability are highly fluid, and hence, accountability requires a constant, substantial engagement and active negotiation processes between organizations and their environment.

The analysis and interpretation of secondary data is not the obvious starting point for any research project. Scholars like to create and control the instrument of data collection so as to respond to their questions or test their hypotheses. However, original research can also be performed on available datasets, either from repositories hosted by universities and foundations, or from data gathered by other scholars who may not be aware of the novel ways their own records can be analyzed. This panel, sponsored by the Association for Communication and Politics (ACOP), has encouraged contributions from scholars who have mined others' data to produce novel and even counter-intuitive results.

Accessibility is a double-edged sword, empowering the individual and democratized knowledge while making precarious the academy's position in society. This panel explores ways to future-proof the academy-societal interface by examining enduring social interfaces, to establish which principles and practices these embody that might nurture open, meaningful and sustained science exchange. In so doing, it showcases new research and scholarly reflection from the Australian and New Zealand Communication Association, which celebrates its 40th year in 2020.

How to understand the intersections among journalism, social movements and public sentiment in Chinese contexts? This question is particularly complicated considering the divergent political systems, socio-cultural mores, and media ecologies in Chinese societies both within and outside of mainland China. Drawing on different ideological positions and theoretical perspectives, the panelists examine the role of media in informing, influencing or inflaming public opinion on issues such as sexual harassment, environmental communication, natural disasters and military conflict in Chinese contexts.

CORPORATE SESSION: Hosted by Provalis. "Apply Automated Content Analysis on Documents in Communications"

Sponsored Sessions

Communications involve researching news articles, social media data, reports, speeches, press releases, and much more. The volume of available text has exploded in the digital age. This explosion is partly due to the rapid move to store and distribute documents in electronic text databases. However, it is extremely time consuming, expensive and in many cases impossible to read each and every document related to ones research. Automated content analysis makes it possible to systematically import and analyze very large volumes of text documents. This presentation will showcase the different content analysis approaches such as computer assisted qualitative coding; text mining; content analysis dictionaries or taxonomies and supervised machine learning. We will discuss when one technique may be more appropriate than another and how they can work together to analyse text data.

COVID19 was initially a public health emergency. But it is increasingly also a social, political, economic, legal, and ethical emergency. It also raises many important questions for communication scholars. About misinformation, health communication, journalism, and science communication, to mention a few. But also questions about what we can and should be doing as communication researchers. Join us for a discussion. All speakers have been vocal in the debate, all are involved in ongoing research or actual impact actions.

As a consequence of 'deep mediatization' – the entanglement of the social world with digital media and infrastructures – public communication has fundamentally transformed. This panel discusses pioneer journalism as a driving force in the rearticulation of news production, the changing figurations between journalism and its audience, and the transformation of individuals' public connections. By contrasting these perspectives, the panel's aim is to gain better insight into the re-figuration of public communication in times of deep mediatization.

As part of the 70th annual conference of the International Communication Association (ICA), First Nations researchers in Australia and internationally are critically interrogating many of the assumptions that underpin the discipline, and emergent practices of "open communication". This panel brings together a diverse range of scholars, who both build upon and challenge the underlying assumptions of the ICA communications divisions, and the open science/open communication movement. Meeting on the traditional lands of the Yugumbeh people, this session will promote critical dialogue and debate about the history, challenges and futures of First Nations communication across a range of social fields.

What are the major challenges we face in greening the academy? What efforts have past and present conference organisers, committees and communities at conferences made to ensure our conference legacy aligns with positive environmental futures? How can we support global movements of activities? How can we ensure and push universities to divest? These are some of the questions our panelists will address in this special session roundtable.

Professional sport provides a powerful platform for communication of social, cultural and political messages. Reflecting the symbiotic relationship that exists between sport and media, it has long been a popular site for promoting progressive, conflicted and reactionary positions on race, gender, sexuality, politics, commercialism or nationalism. The environment represents a new frontier in this context. This panel asks how the tensions presented by intersecting media, commercial and environmental agendas are negotiated in contemporary sport.

By 2050 two thirds of the global population will live in urban areas: cities, suburbs, and exurbs. Today over 82% of Americans live in cities. Much of what we mean by communication takes place in cities. In this workshop/panel discussion senior scholars share their research philosophies and give advice as to how to approach the study of communication and media in urban settings. Sponsored by the Urban Communication Foundation we invite scholars from all interest areas whose work has impact on city life and the urban environment to join us for a lively session of sharing ideas, giving feedback, and creating possible new collaborations. The Foundation will also share information on its new Communicative Cities initiative and announce the 2020 James Carey Urban Communication Research Grant.

The robustness of published research in the social sciences has been under intense and widespread scrutiny. In response, the open science/research movement aims at making research more transparent, collaborative, and accessible. This roundtable will discuss a seven-point agenda for our discipline to achieve these goals that will soon be published in the Journal of Communication. Audience participation will be encouraged to actively engage with this call to action towards greater openness in communication scholarship.

This panel brings together scholars from across subfields of communication studies to critically explore open science initiatives. Drawing on qualitative, feminist, design, historical, and community-based research, this panel explores alternative approaches to conducting rigorous research beyond experimental and positivistic paradigms. In particular, this panel examines how open communication must contend with issues related to power, situated knowledge, historicity, contextuality, and scientific legitimacy. Open science can benefit from the perspectives of critical and interpretive social sciences.

LEARNING LAB: How to Do Open Science: Hands-on Pre-registration Training

Theme

Chairs
Flavio Azevedo, U of Jena, GERMANY
Sam Parsons, U of Oxford, UNITED KINGDOM

This hands-on session will focus on the application of a key method of all open research, quantitative and qualitative alike, and its benefits to your research process: preregistration. You will learn how you can preregister your future studies by using freely available preregistration templates as well as the additional management, data, code and documentation storage and sharing facilities offered by the Open Science Framework to make your own research more open and reproducible (note: if possible, bring your own laptop!).
Recommended to attend LEARNING LAB ONE: Revolutionizing (Open) Methods Pedagogy in Communication prior to taking this training, but not required.

LEARNING LAB: Revolutionizing (Open) Methods Pedagogy in Communication

Theme

Chairs
Flavio Azevedo, U of Jena, GERMANY
Sam Parsons, U of Oxford, UNITED KINGDOM

This practice-focused session shows how we can adapt our methods training to prepare our students for the future of open research and introduces the Framework for Open and Reproducible Research Training (FORRT): an effective, evolving, and community-driven framework supporting methods instructors in the incremental adoption of teaching and mentoring practices that improve the transparency and rigor of students' research through principled teaching of open and reproducible research practices. In this session, you will learn how you can benefit from FORRTs pedagogical resource NEXUS and its pedagogical self-assessment tool and how you can become part of FORRT's growing community.

Andreas Scheu, U of Muenster, GERMANY
Jefferson Pooley, Muhlenberg College, USA

This roundtable features communication scholars who have experience with open access, journal editing, or both. In conversation with each other, these scholars will consider the most pressing issues facing the struggle for open access in communication. The discussants will consider issues both philosophical and prosaic, with a focus on: publishers' understandings of open access, the field of communication's special place in open access, success stories in open access, and the many hurdles that remain.

In response to the conference theme of "Open Science," a panel of Communication scholars reflect upon their concerns about how open science practices may affect the study of marginalized populations. Although we agree that transparency and creation of public goods are noble goals, members of this panel will consider what transparency may mean when studying Communication with more marginalized groups or with entities that wish to harm researchers themselves.

Instagram has a billion users, yet despite being owned by Facebook remains a platform vastly more popular with young people, and synonymous with the visual/cultural zeitgeist. However, compared to giants such as Facebook and Twitter, Instagram remains significantly under-researched. This roundtable addresses that lack, beginning with eight contributions (with researchers from four countries) using novel methods to approach Instagram, outlining the tools, how they've developed, and their initial findings, opening up a broader Instagram discussion.

2020 ICA Top Paper Winner: Sijia Yang Ph. D.

Assistant Professor Sijia Yang Ph. D.

Sijia Yang studies media effects and persuasion in the health communication context. Through computational methods like text mining, web-based dynamic experiments and recommendation systems, he studies message effects and persuasion on digital media. Yang received a 2020 Top Paper award from the ICA's Health Communication Division for "Moral Appeals and Message Persuasiveness: From Textual to Visual Tobacco Control Messages."

Center for Communication and Civic Renewal

The School of Journalism and Mass Communication at the University of Wisconsin–Madison received $1 million from the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation to establish the Center for Communication and Civic Renewal. Drawing on the varying expertise of SJMC professors Lew Friedland, Dhavan Shah and Mike Wagner, along with collaborators from other departments on campus and universities, this Center will build on 10 years of research to further investigate and research how information at state and regional levels contribute to political polarization.
